COVER STORY

40 HOLLYWOOD GOES WILDE

This is a year Olivia Wilde won't soon forget. On the downside, she separated from her husband, on the upside, she's starring in three films — Cowboys & Aliens and The Change-Up this summer, and the upcoming In Time. We caught up with Wilde on a chilly Quebec movie set to find out how she took Hollywood by storm

EDITOR'S NOTE

THOSE HEADLINES ARE WILDE!

When I was a student at journalism school, this was the advice they gave about using puns in headlines: do it sparingly, and then only when they're really, really good.

But it's so hard to resist when you're writing about an actor named Olivia Wilde, who's led a pretty wild life. Yes, we did it. The headline for our cover story, page 40, is "Wilde Life."

A quick scan of other magazine headlines and cover lines regarding Olivia Wilde reveals such bon mots as "Why We're Wilde About Olivia," "Olivia Goes Wilde on House," "Wilde Kingdom," "Going Wild for Olivia Wilde," "Wilde at Heart" and "Wilde Blue Wonder." We're not even sure we get that last one.

But the funny thing is, Wilde isn't really her last name. The sexy star was born Olivia Cockburn. That's pronounced Ko-burn, for all the guys who've read her name without the Irish pronunciation and then left cheeky comments on message boards. Take, for instance, KeyWestDan, who shared this opinion on The Huffington Post's website, "Understandable name-change. Turns guys' sex expectations from scary to awesome."

But in a radio interview a few years back, Wilde insisted the change had nothing to do with any double entendre. Instead, it was about forging her own path, one distinct from her family of fairly well known journalists and writers. (Her mom, Leslie Cockburn, has worked for 60 Minutes and most of her other relatives are in the biz.)

And those fans who found Wilde through lads' mags (she did top Maxim's Hot 100 two years ago, after all) have it all wrong when they assume she chose the name to elicit some sort of sexual titillation. Well, not the kind they're thinking of, anyway.

Truth is, as Wilde explained on that radio show, she was performing in a production of Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest at the time and chose Wilde to honour the man she found "incredibly inspiring and someone who didn't care what the masses were saying about him." A reference, of course, to Oscar Wilde's attempt to live as openly as possible as a gay man in the 1800s.

Whatever the reason, the name seems to be working for Wilde, who has three big films in theatres over the next three months, Cowboys & Aliens, The Change-Up and In Time. We're just glad she wasn't in a production of Pygmalion when she made the change. Olivia Bernard Shaw just doesn't have the same ring.

Elsewhere in this issue, Rise of the Planet of the Apes star Freida Pinto muses on her budding career (page 30), Helen Mirren talks about the difficult research involved in preparing for The Debt (page 26), we have The Help's Bryce Dallas Howard on why, lately, she's been drawn to mean characters (page 34), and 30-year-old Jim Sturgess tells us how he aged from 20 to 40 for One Day (page 38).

BOMBS AWAY

The plot for the Jesse Eisenberg, Aziz Ansari comedy 30 Minutes or Less — about a kidnapped pizza delivery guy whose captors strap explosives to him and force him to rob a bank — may sound implausible, but is in fact based on a real event.

In 2003, Brian Douglas Wells, a 56-year-old pizza delivery man from Erie, Pennsylvania, walked into a bank wearing a collar bomb around his neck. He demanded $25,000, telling police that three strangers grabbed him, attached the bomb, and told him if he committed the robbery they'd let him go. The bomb squad was called, but three minutes before they arrived the bomb exploded, killing Wells.

It turned out Wells was actually involved in planning the heist, and agreed to wear a fake bomb. However, his accomplices forced him to wear a real one, and it's believed they detonated the device to stop Wells from turning them in.

Along with 30 Minutes or Less, this bizarre, real-life story has inspired episodes of TV's Bones, Criminal Minds, Law & Order: Criminal Intent and Flashpoint.

But before you yell "Spoiler!," you should know we have no idea how 30 Minutes or Less ends. It is a comedy, after all, so we're not toooooo worried about Eisenberg's character. —IR Production's underway on the new Superman movie, Man of Steel, with shooting taking place in Illinois and director Zack Snyder's beloved Vancouver, where he shot both Sucker Punch and Watchmen.

Keep your eyes peeled for Henry Cavill (Clark Kent/Superman), Amy Adams (Lois Lane), Russell Crowe (Jor-El), Michael Shannon (Zod), Kevin Costner (Jonathan Kent) and Diane Lane (Martha Kent) over the next several months as filming could stretch into 2012. —MW

The Art of Film

Austin, Texas, illustrator Tim Doyle says sometimes a movie image just won't leave him alone until he draws it. The result is a portfolio of work based largely on film. "Movies and TV are one of the few shared experiences that people still have in common," says Doyle, "and the type of pop art I like to do reflects that back in what I hope is a new and interesting way." Some images are iconic, like Fredo's end in The Godfather: Part II (centre), and Mr. White comforting Mr. Orange in Reservoir Dogs (right), while others are more obscure, like the blind man's prophecy about a cow in Oh Brother, Where Art Thou? (left). You can buy T-shirts and prints of Doyle's work at www.nakatominc.com. —MW

DON'T TRY THIS AT HOME

▶ How improbable something is in the real world is often conversely related to how likely it is to be used as a movie device. Take the body swap. As far as we know, it's never actually happened, yet so many movies use it. This month, The Change-Up sees two buddies (Ryan Reynolds, Jason Bateman) swap bodies after peeing into an enchanted fountain together. Which got us thinking about other, ahem, tools movies have used to achieve the swap.

ARGUMENT FREAKY FRIDAY (1976) After a heated dispute, a mother (Barbara Harris) and daughter (Jodie Foster) simultaneously wish the other could be in their shoes for just one day.

TIBETAN SKULL VICE VERSA (1988) A father (Judge Reinhold) and son (Fred Savage) simultaneously wish they were each other's age while both touching an ancient Tibetan skull.

FACE TRANSPLANT FACE/OFF (1997) Radical surgery allows an FBI agent (John Travolta) to switch faces with a comatose murderer (Nicolas Cage) to gain info about a future bombing.

AZTEC GOD IT'S A BOY GIRL THING (2006) Two high school students (Samaire Armstrong, Kevin Zegers) swap bodies after arguing in front of the statue of an Aztec god during a class trip to a museum.

ENCHANTED EARRINGS THE HOT CHICK (2002) A teen (Rachel McAdams) steals a pair of ancient African earrings then loses one, which is found by a crook (Rob Schneider). When both put on their earring they're transported into each other's bodies. —MW

LADY KILLERS

According to Hollywood, if a little girl witnesses her parents' murders, she probably won't grow up to be a dental hygienist or insurance broker. No, she's destined to become a warrior.

In Colombiana, a nine-year-old girl sees her mommy and daddy killed, which drives her to become an assassin (Zoe Saldana) and seek revenge against her parents' killers.

We've seen it before with the lethal O-Ren Ishii (Lucy Liu) in Kill Bill: Vol. 1, a leather-clad Elektra (Jennifer Garner) in Elektra, the sword-swinging Sonja (Brigitte Nielsen) in Red Sonja and 12-year-old Mathilda (Natalie Portman) in The Professional.

It should come as no surprise that Luc Besson, who wrote and directed The Professional and Nikita (about a female drug addict-turned-assassin) also wrote Colombiana. —IR

Quote Unquote

I JUST DESPISED THE MAN. THERE WAS NOTHING THAT I COULD SEE IN HIM THAT I COULD LATCH ONTO AND LIKE. IT WAS BEYOND MY CAPABILITIES TO GET INTO THE MINDSET OF A MAN WHO DID THE THINGS HE DID.

ALONG FOR THE RIDE
 Hey look, it's Robert Pattinson riding a bike on the Toronto set of Cosmopolis. Oh, wait, no it's not. That's Pattinson's body double. Sorry buddy, we don't know your name or we'd mention it. But we guess being anonymous is sort of your job.

ALMOST GROUNDBREAKING!!!!
 We were all set to congratulate the Glee movie for becoming the first English-language film with the balls to work two exclamation marks into its title. Right up until our press time, the movie was called Glee Live! 3D! But at the eleventh hour the powers that be changed the film's title to Glee: The 3D Concert Movie. That's not nearly as gleeful.

FAN EXPO CANADA
John Waters, Martin Landau, Karen Allen, Eliza Dushku, Tom Felton, Malcolm McDowell, Nichelle Nichols and Robert Englund are among the celebrity guests in Toronto this month for Fan Expo Canada (August 25 to 28).
 The festival evolved from the Canadian National Comic Book Expo, which started in 1995, and now celebrates five distinct pop-culture genres, albeit with overlapping appeal: comic books, sci-fi, horror, anime and gaming.
 If you've never been to one of these, it's a massive mish-mash of workshops, Q&A sessions, gaming tournaments and, oh, costumes.
 Go to www.fanexpocanada.com for more information.

SPOTLIGHT

LEAH GIBSON GOES APE

Leah Gibson's role in Rise of the Planet of the Apes isn't a big one; she only has one scene. But she got to share that scene with Tom Felton — of Harry Potter fame — and even better, about a dozen apes.

Well, not apes so much as actors in motion-capture suits who were later turned into apes by Weta Digital, the special-effects company behind Avatar and the Lord of the Rings movies.

But for Gibson, those actors were already apes. "I am acting with the energy and the body language and the very live real embodiment of an ape in front of me," says the 26-year-old actor on the phone from her Vancouver home.

Okay, but minus Gibson's well-honed sense of imagination, what did those actors really look like? "They were in full body suits with nodes all over their faces and their body," says Gibson. "They looked more like bald, brown-skinned creatures."

And those mo-cap actors took their roles very seriously, especially the one with whom Gibson had the most interaction. "In between takes she pulled out some pictures of an orangutan that she went to spend time with at a zoo in Seattle and studied the body language of. She wanted to show me exactly what I was to be responding to, and interacting with. Her body language was just very powerful in how she portrayed the ape. It was a joy to work with."

Gibson, who was born and raised in Victoria, B.C., is a trained dancer who transitioned to musical theatre and then to the screen with roles in Watchmen and TV's Caprica. Then last year she played the vampire Nettie in the Twilight movie, Eclipse — a role that still has her travelling the world on the convention circuit.

In Apes she plays a fun-loving party girl who flirts with Felton's character, an unlikable guy working at an ape holding facility. When he does something stupid to impress her, the result is catastrophic. Gibson can't reveal any more, but does admit she screamed her way hoarse during a post-production dubbing session.

"It's a smaller role in the story," she says, "but it's in a really important scene in the film because this scene builds up into the climax of the whole film." —MARNI WEISZ

FACEOFF:

CONAN THE BARBARIAN

When the new Conan the Barbarian movie was announced, the question was, who would dare take on the role made famous by Arnold Schwarzenegger? The gap-toothed Austrian with freakishly large muscles instantly became synonymous with Conan when his fantasy flick was released in May 1982. Twilight hottie Kellan Lutz was considered, but ultimately Jason Momoa, a half-Hawaiian model/actor with a TV pedigree, was chosen to wield Conan's sword. Here we compare the two Conans and their movies:

VAMPIRE FILM AWARDS

Fright Night's Colin Farrell

Colin Farrell makes his debut as a bloodsucker in this month's Fright Night remake. With Breaking Dawn, Part 1 opening in November, and Underworld 4: New Dawn, Dark Shadows and Abraham Lincoln: Vampire Hunter hitting screens in 2012, Hollywood continues to feed the vampire craze. So we thought it was time to honour the cinematic undead with our very own Vampire Film Awards ■ BY INGRID RANDOJA

▲ BEST VAMPIRE HAIR

The Lost Boys (1987)

A group award for vamps whose dos include a peroxide mullet, voluminous boy-band hair and perms — ah, the '80s, when no hairstyle was thought ridiculous.

◀ BEST VAMPIRE FANGS

Grace Jones (Vamp, 1986)

It's their substantial size, creepy crookedness and Jones' boney gums that seal the deal.

▲ BEST VAMPIRE COUPLE

Catherine Deneuve & David Bowie

(The Hunger, 1983)

Refined, sensuous, porcelain-skinned beauties — either one biting us would not be a problem.

▼ BEST VAMPIRE SEDUCTION

Tom Cruise turns Brad Pitt

(Interview With the Vampire, 1994)

Tom Cruise sinking his teeth into Brad Pitt's neck is hot. There, we said it.

▲ BEST DRESSED VAMPIRE (FEMALE)

Kate Beckinsale

(Underworld series)

Leather corset. Leather boots. Leather pants. Leather top. Love the leather, from head to toe.

▲ BEST DRESSED VAMPIRE (MALE)

Gary Oldman (Bram Stoker's Dracula, 1992)

No torn jeans or plaid shirts for Oldman. He's dapper, elegant, and who doesn't love those pince-nez sunglasses?

▼ MOST UNBELIEVABLE VAMPIRE HOBBY

Old-Timey Baseball

(Twilight, 2007)

Really? You are vampires for God's sake, the coolest of the undead.

▲ THE HALL OF FAME GOLDEN CAPE AWARD

Christopher Lee

When it comes to playing vampires, no other actor can hold a candle to 89-year-old Lee, who has portrayed vampires in a record 11 films, from 1958's Dracula to the 1976 French pic Dracula père et fils.

▶ MOST GRUESOME VAMPIRES

30 Days of Night (2007)

Yuck. It's the jagged, razor-sharp teeth, big black eyes and the fact they refuse to wipe their faces after feeding that grosses us out.

HELEN MIRREN'S SECRET

We know good roles for women over 40 are almost non-existent. But Helen Mirren keeps landing great part after great part, including an Israeli spy with something to hide in The Debt. Here the age-defying star tells us how she does it

■ BY MARK PILKINGTON

THE DEBT HITS THEATRES AUGUST 31ST

If anyone is the embodiment of acting royalty, it is Dame Helen Mirren. Having started her career on stage with the Royal Shakespeare Company, she went on to a successful career in mostly British movies and on TV, where she was best known for starring in the U.K. crime drama Prime Suspect; she earned two Emmy Awards for that role. But over the past decade, the big screen has come calling again, and with renewed force.

Critically acclaimed for her performances in The Madness of King George, Gosford Park, Calendar Girls, and The Queen, Mirren has now reunited with the director of Prime Suspect 4: The Lost Child, John Madden, for The Debt, in which she plays a former Israeli spy whose past catches up with her when new info emerges about a long-ago mission. We met up with the 66-year-old actor in London where she explained the secret behind her incredible success.

Some actors have commented that there are less and less good parts available the older they get, whereas your opportunities seem to be increasing. How do you explain this?

"I think if you manage to stay on in my profession through your 40s and 50s, which is the age where an awful lot of actors drop away because there is not enough work for them, then you tend to find you face less competition and thus there are more opportunities out there. I think one of the reasons I have done so well is because all of my life I have gone back to the theatre. About every four years, sometimes less, I will go and do some theatre work. I think because of that my career has kept going."

Why the theatre?

"I think it allows the audience to re-evaluate who you are. It's important to make the audience constantly re-evaluate you so you don't get pigeonholed into something that they won't let you escape from. Maybe it's something to do with that but, of course, I also do it because I love the theatre!"

Helen Mirren as a former Mossad agent in The Debt

You make a very convincing Israeli agent in The Debt.

How did you prepare for the role?

"The research I did was related to reminding myself of the power and impact of the Holocaust during the Second World War. My character is carrying the memory, anger and passion of that. My research was more to do with reminding myself of where this comes from."

What did you learn from that?

"The efforts the Jews went to after the war to bring the Nazis to justice, whether they were guards in concentration camps or Nazi doctors, has to be commended. I think that was an extremely important process to happen. People have to remember. What can't happen is it just disappears into history and is swept under the carpet. I think if people suffer like that, history has to remember it."

So you think there's a danger that people will forget what happened in the past?

"Yes, yes I do. Partly because they're not being taught in schools, and partly because history marches on and certain things will be forgotten. I went to Germany recently to visit a World War II remembrance site, and it was incredibly powerful. You had the opportunity to pay respect to the lives and the deaths of the people who were there."

It seems that you are always working, but is it true you're thinking about taking a break from making films?

"Yes I am, not so much from the film business, but from work in general. I think I've earned a break; I've worked absolutely non-stop in the past 10 years. I'm going to take a nice little three-month break."

Only three months? I thought you were going to say three years.

"Well three months is rare for me. Often I finish a film, then go back to London, unpack, repack and then go off and work on another film. Then finish that film, go back to Los Angeles, unpack, repack, then go off and make another film. It's been like that for years and years."

In 2007 you released your autobiography, In the Frame.

Do you have any plans to expand on it, or write another one?

"Yes I think I will, and I think I will do it differently next time. Maybe I'll start right from the beginning and I'll write a different kind of book... I'd actually quite like to write a book about my

But it forced me to really consider, think and research, and as I was researching, my respect for the Queen really grew enormously.”

Your last film, Arthur, was a broad comedy. Is there a funny side to you that you would like to showcase a bit more?

“Oh, definitely! I mean I have to say it was really hard doing Arthur. It was exhausting. The young director [Jason Winer] was just relentless! These big comedy pieces, you know they are very technical. It was just such hard work.”

Would you say comedy is harder to do than drama?

“I don’t think so, no. To act in a dramatic role is very intense and personal for an actor, but comedy is something that is constructed. Especially comedy in film, because you have no immediate reaction from the audience to see whether it is funny or not. But I would love to do more comedy, I really enjoyed it.”

▶ sex life! But I’d have to do it when I’m 90 years old and just about to die. It can come out posthumously.”

Having played the Queen, were you invited to the Royal wedding earlier this year?

“No, I was in Italy at the time, but I would have been there like a shot if invited! My hat would have been really nice. It would have been quite small because I would have been polite about the people sitting behind me. I thought they were so rude, all of them!”

Have you become a bit of a Royalist yourself?

“I’m a Queenist. For me there’s two things — there’s the institution of the monarchy which I am not at all sure about, then there are the Royal family as people. Princess Anne I have immense respect for, the Queen I have immense respect for, Charles also. I think these are serious, dedicated and dutiful people with a real decency about them.”

But aren’t they overpaid?

“I’d say if anything they are underpaid, when you think of how much footballers earn or some movie stars. I’ve become less politicized about all that than I used to be. Before I starred in The Queen I never really thought about it, I just had a slightly knee-jerk reaction.

FROM RUSSIA, IN PART...

Helen Mirren may seem like the epitome of British stock — here she is winning an Oscar for playing the Queen of England, after all — but she was actually born Ilyena Lydia Vasilievna Mironov. Her grandfather, Pyotr Vasilievich Mironov, was a colonel in Russia’s Tsarist Army and was stranded in the U.K., where he’d been negotiating an arms deal, during the Russian Revolution. Mirren’s father, Vasily, decided to anglicize the family name when Ilyena was still a little girl.

However, on her mom’s side, Mirren does have a connection to British royalty. Her mother’s grandfather was Queen Victoria’s butcher. —MW

Freida Pinto

OPENS DOORS

Ever notice how few Indian actors there are in Hollywood? Freida Pinto says she's happy to prove anything's possible for Indian actors, like getting a plum role in the big-budget summer pic Rise of the Planet of the Apes ■ BY INGRID RANDOJA

Bollywood didn't want Freida Pinto. Perhaps it's because she's small-boned and delicate-looking, or that her name isn't typically Indian, or that she doesn't have any connections in the industry, but whatever the reasons, the Mumbai-born aspiring actor couldn't land a job in an Indian film.

She turned to modelling and hosting a TV travel show before a British director by the name of Danny Boyle finally cast her in her first film, 2008's Slumdog Millionaire.

Her graceful turn as Latika, the object of affection for teenage game show contestant Jamal (Dev Patel), turned heads around the world. Don't take our word for it, just five days after Slumdog Millionaire's limited North American release in November 2008, Yahoo reported web searches for "Freida Pinto" increased 65,740 percent in one day.

Suddenly, Pinto could envision a career that went way, way beyond Bollywood.

"I feel when you've been given a golden opportunity it's honestly really stupid to just waste it by doing nothing about it," says the 26-year-old actor during an interview in Montreal last year.

"When I can be one of the Indians who tries to break the stereotype and comes out here to the West to make films that are more appealing to the global masses rather than one particular country, why not? I should just do it."

Her newest film, Rise of the Planet of the Apes, takes dead aim at the global masses.

Not only is it a reboot of the Planet of the Apes franchise — which released five films between 1968 and 1973 — it's also a mash-up of sorts. Rise does what films number three and four of the original series — Escape from the Planet of the Apes and Conquest of the Planet of the Apes — did; focus on how the apes go from zoo and lab animals to angry, sentient beings who rise up against their human oppressors.

EVOLUTION OF APES

Just as we're fascinated by the digital special effects used to create Rise of the Planet of the Apes' simian Caesar, played by motion-capture magician Andy Serkis, some 40 years ago audiences were amazed by the big-screen apes they saw in 1968's Planet of the Apes. No film had ever attempted to transform actors into believable, talking apes — let alone on such a large scale with scores of onscreen simians. Famed makeup artist John Chambers was brought in to oversee the task. He assembled more than 80 makeup artists and three full-time wigmakers, and he demanded a budget big enough for the job (it eventually hit a then unheard of $1-million).

Chambers created foam rubber components — cheeks, chins, muzzles, noses — that were applied, one-by-one, onto the actor's face to create the ape mask. Then a wig, made out of human hair imported from Korea, was attached.

It sounds straightforward, but Chambers and his team actually invented new types of foam rubber, adhesive and paint to make their prosthetics durable, yet pliable enough that the actors' expressions could be seen under the makeup. Even with their upgrades the masks were brutally hot, and the actors were given special refrigerated trailers in which to cool off.

For Roddy McDowall, who played chimpanzee archaeologist Cornelius, the makeup process took almost four hours each day. As McDowall told Planet of the Apes magazine in 1975, "I'm not a true claustrophobe, but after a time, not being able to scratch my nose, eat anything or drink except through a straw really works on my nerves. After about five hours I really become a basket case!" And as a chain smoker, McDowall had to use an extra-long cigarette holder to keep up his habit.

McDowall starred in four out of the five Apes films, and in the short-lived Planet of the Apes TV series. His commitment to the Ape universe can be measured by the fact that while making Battle for the Planet of the Apes (1973), he had to have three small cysts, that were caused by the repeated application and removal of his ape makeup, surgically removed from his face. —INGRID RANDOJA ► Pinto was never a diehard fan of the Apes series (she grew up loving animated movies), but appreciates the message in the reboot.

"I don't remember when I watched Planet of the Apes, it was ages ago," she says, "but then when I read what this story was about, and yes it was a big-budget film and all of that, but it had soul. It's this battle between human and apes, with humans trying to make themselves superior by exploiting the space of another animal."

Rise of the Planet of the Apes is just Pinto's fourth film. After making Slumdog Millionaire, Pinto — who never officially studied acting — took a three-month course. She says the program taught her technical aspects associated with film acting, but she credits the six months she spent auditioning for Danny Boyle as her best training ground.

Slumdog led Woody Allen to cast her as Josh Brolin's muse in 2010's You Will Meet a Tall Dark Stranger. She then changed course completely with Miral, playing a Palestinian teen whose love for a PLO leader leads her down a dangerous path.

It's not a long resumé, but it certainly is a diverse one.

"I take that as a compliment," says Pinto. "What I try to do with my characters in the four films I've done so far, is to try and bring something different to all of them."

What she brings, aside from her talent, is a visible ethnicity that is sorely lacking in Hollywood films. However, Pinto doesn't blame her lighter-skinned, fair-haired peers for the sad state of onscreen minority representation.

"They have their own appeal and they bring whatever they bring to a film, and I bring something that I do not feel has been explored much in Hollywood, or in any other industry for that matter. I feel really happy that I've broken the stereotype that making it is not possible for Indian actors — because I think anything is possible," she says.

"And I feel that the timing is right as well. The world has gotten much smaller. If you go to America it's not just 'Americans' there, everybody's there, there are so many Indians I meet in New York. And I really don't know what it is with people believing that if you live in India, there are only Indians there. I have an English friend living in India who is a makeup artist.

"So this is a brilliant opportunity," adds Pinto, "and I'm glad I've been embraced with arms wide open." □

Good at BEING B

Bryce Dallas Howard has developed a mean streak, on film anyway. Here she talks about the latest in her string of nasty characters, a racist housewife in The Help ■ BY BOB STRAUSS

Bryce Dallas Howard's sweet, otherworldly innocence got her started in movies. These days, though, she's acting as nasty as she can. On the heels of playing the sadistic vampire Victoria in last year's Eclipse, Howard can now be seen as the conniving racist Hilly Holbrook in the big-screen adaptation of Kathryn Stockett's hugely popular novel The Help.

"Hilly is not a nice person," Howard says with a laugh during an interview in L.A. "But she's also unintentionally laughable sometimes. That doesn't make her less hateful, but it does help if you're playing that kind of character."

Set in 1960s Jackson, Mississippi, as segregation enters its final, ugly death throes, The Help follows recent college graduate Skeeter Phelan (Emma Stone), as she chronicles the lives of the black domestic servants who helped raise so many white kids like herself. While the project brings an unfamiliar attention to the black women, snobby, often hysterical Hilly tries to push things the other way, even going so far as to encourage households to install separate toilets outside for the "coloured help."

Appalling as that sounds now, it was how things often were in the Jim Crow South, a shameful period that Mississippian Stockett has captured in a compelling way.

"The script is remarkably faithful to the book, which makes it amazingly good," notes Howard, who turned 30 earlier this year. "It shows the times and the attitudes and the civil rights movement in a strong, realistic way."

Howard says Tate Taylor, the actor (he was most recently in Winter's Bone) and childhood friend of Stockett's who adapted the novel and directed the movie, gets the credit for maintaining that authentic Southern flavour. That nod to Taylor is in keeping with Howard's general appreciation of distinctive filmmakers, an appreciation which has guided her career ever since M. Night Shyamalan plucked her out of a New York stage play and cast her in The Village.

Since then, Howard has worked for auteurs as diverse as Sam Raimi (Spider-Man 3), Kenneth Branagh (As You Like It), Lars von Trier (Manderlay) and Clint Eastwood (Hereafter).

“It shows the times and the attitudes and the civil rights movement in a strong, realistic way,” says Howard

With any luck, Howard will also be back in Canada soon, where she worked on two of her last three features. “I love Vancouver,” she says. “I made Eclipse and the Seth Rogen, Joseph Gordon Levitt comedy 50/50 there. Seth showed me around a bit, it’s such a cool place.”

▶ “I’ve been very lucky,” she acknowledges. “My primary goal with a film is to be a vessel for the filmmaker. I don’t really have a set process, I really just try to understand what the filmmaker is hoping to achieve, and then adapt to their process and try to support achieving those goals. Because of that, my main focus with films is to find movies with filmmakers who I feel have a really singular voice and distinctive take on storytelling. Thus far, I’ve had a lot of those experiences, and it’s been great.

“I think it’s perhaps a bit Freudian, too,” she adds with a laugh, “just wanting to understand the filmmaker, you know?”

That would be because her dad is actor-turned-Oscar-winning-director Ron Howard. As a child and then a teen, she appeared as an extra in her father’s movies Parenthood, Apollo 13 and How the Grinch Stole Christmas. But following the previous two Howard generations into acting (her grandparents Rance and Jean Howard have long filmographies) was never a foregone conclusion.

“I didn’t necessarily know that I wanted to be an actor, but I was always an imaginative kid,” Howard recalls. “And I loved going to sets, that was my favourite thing. It really happened more when I was applying to colleges and had to declare a major. I had been doing school plays, but I wanted to focus on writing. At NYU, you could do a double major and I thought, why not focus on acting and writing?”

So how did her folks, who moved to Connecticut primarily to prevent their four kids from going Hollywood, react to that news?

“My parents have been totally supportive,” says Howard, who, for a while, auditioned as Bryce Dallas so as not to capitalize on the family name. “They didn’t want any of us to try to be a professional actor before we were 18, but after we were adults, anything that we chose to do, as long as we could support ourselves financially, they were for us.”

That support has finally blossomed into a creative collaboration with her dad. It was recently announced that Ron will produce and Bryce will direct a short film for Project Imagin8ion, a Canon camera campaign in which photos submitted by digital camera users will inspire a movie.

Set for release this September, 50/50 is the semi-autobiographical story of writer Will Reiser’s youthful struggle with a deadly disease.

“The film’s original title was I’m With Cancer, so that gives you some idea of the tone,” says Howard, who, despite the film’s sensitive subject matter, did not put her bad-girl streak on hold for the role — she plays a self-absorbed artist without much compassion. “It has a lot of depth and a lot of emotion, but it is hilarious. I play Joseph’s character’s girlfriend. He’s the one with cancer, and she deals with it in not the greatest way.”

Bob Strauss lives in L.A. where he writes about movies and filmmakers.

Ever feel like looking up an old flame?
Jim Sturgess gets to act out that fantasy in One Day, a romance that checks in on a man and woman, on the same day, for 20 years post-fling ■ BY JENNIFER EVANS

It's midnight and Jim Sturgess has just finished shooting scenes for his upcoming drama Ashes, when he calls from London, England. The 30-year-old star of films like The Other Boleyn Girl, Fifty Dead Men Walking and 21 is in a car en route to his home in Camden, a London suburb, when he reveals he never thought he'd become an actor. In fact, he dreamed of being something else entirely.

"I was in a band and was convinced that I'd be in it for the rest of my life," he says. "Then the rest of the members went off to university and I thought, 'Damn, what am I going to do now?'" Unsure of his next step, Sturgess took a media course which inspired him to write and perform a one-man play. A comment from an audience member after the show would be the catalyst that set his acting career in motion. "Someone in the crowd said I should speak to an agent, which I did. I had no ambitions to become an actor. So, acting was a bit of a happy accident," he says.

Accident or not, Sturgess is proving he has what it takes to make it on the big screen. Lone Scherfig, the acclaimed director of the 2009 hit An Education certainly thought so when she cast him in her latest film One Day. Sturgess plays a superficial television producer who can't seem to get his quirky college one-night stand — played by Anne Hathaway — out of his mind. Every year on the anniversary of the day they met, we get a window into where the two now are in their lives. Sometimes they are together, sometimes not.

Here, Sturgess tells us about his music, what he's gotten from acting, and playing an insensitive and shallow man in this month's decades-spanning One Day.

TIME AFTER TIME

ONE DAY HITS THEATRES AUGUST 19TH

now. It's quite strange to play because you're a young man at 20 but you're not old at 40."

Where does your passion for acting come from?

"I don't know. I guess I love it because it keeps me doing really crazy things. You're always doing something new with a new group of people with a new character to play. It makes you live life to the full. There are so many moments where I think, 'Wow, I'm having a moment. This is incredible!' You're just constantly enriching your life."

What are some of those enriching moments?

"Before One Day, I did a film called The Way Back with Colin Farrell. I play a survivor in a Soviet labour camp who walks from Siberia to India during the Second World War. I had such an incredible journey of learning how to survive in the wilderness along with Colin. Then for Fifty Dead Men Walking, I learned how to make bombs with real members of the IRA. I've also learned how to count cards from gamblers who took casinos for millions for 21, and sang 'All You Need is Love' on top of a giant building for the Beatles film Across the Universe. It's just very cool."

Who inspired you to become an actor?

"The first actor that really, really blew my mind was David Thewlis in the 1993 film Naked. It was one of the best performances I'd ever seen. I also loved River Phoenix in Stand By Me."

Are you ready for fame?

"Some actors I've worked with have to deal with major fame and it can affect your life in a really negative way. I've managed not to have that in my life at all. I'm very lucky. But you never know when it's going to come so I don't know how much control you have over it. But I find it very strange that people would seek out fame."

Is it true that you still play in a band?

"I still play a lot of music. My girlfriend, Mickey O'Brien, and I have written and are just in the process of recording our first album together. It'll be called Tragic Toys. She's a keyboard player for the band La Roux. We both work hard but when we're at home, we write a lot of music."

So you're okay with being an emerging star?

"I'm always happy to be emerging and continue to emerge. That's just fine by me." ☑

Jennifer Evans is a freelance entertainment and lifestyle journalist from Toronto.

Could you relate to Dexter, your character in One Day?

"He's not exactly someone I'd like. He can be vulgar — which was kind of fun to play. I could see all the trouble Dexter gets himself into. That sort of thing I could definitely relate to."

What was it like working with Anne Hathaway?

"It was so great. I often make films abroad in America so it was really nice to make a film at home in London. It was lovely to have Anne come and I could sort of look after her. I showed her some local spots. It was a lot of fun."

Dexter ages from 20 to 40 in the film; how did you handle that?

HITS THEATRES JULY 29TH

WILDE Life

At 27, Olivia Wilde has already been married to (and separated from) Italian royalty, starred in two hit TV series, and been named one of the world's hottest women. Now, it's time to be a movie star. We catch up with the overachiever at a grungy Quebec motel ■ BY MARNI WEISZ

After dreaming of being a movie star nearly all her life, Olivia Wilde finally is one. Which, combined with her place in the top one percent of the world's most photogenic people, gives her a bit of experience with the paparazzi. And she says ours are absolutely the best — when it comes to recommendations about hot beverages, anyway.

"A paparazzo today gave me advice on where to get a coffee," chirps Wilde on the set of Blackbird, a thriller shooting in Iberville, Quebec, about 45 minutes southeast of Montreal. "She's all, 'I notice that you like this place, but I was thinking that because you like it so much you'd probably like this other place. Go around the corner, go left!' I was like, 'Gosh, thank you. They don't make them like you in L.A.'"

It's late March and Wilde is filming at a grungy old motel made up to look like a Western-themed, Michigan bar. She's wearing a very short, very shiny purple dress — so shiny it's causing all sorts of headaches for the lighting crew. Wilde throws a long, black parka over the outfit before meeting with the press. "Anytime I'm allowed to wear the Canada Goose Gore-Tex I take advantage of the opportunity," she says.

The paparazzi, and the tabloids, are even more interested in Wilde now that she's single. Her nine-year marriage to Tao Ruspoli, a documentary filmmaker and the son of an Italian prince, who she met and married when she was just 18 (he was 27), ended shortly before this trip to Quebec.

"We got engaged at Burning Man and married on a school bus," Wilde later told Glamour magazine. "We were not conventional. I think the promise we always made was that if we are no longer happy, we won't continue. And it got to the point where I was working 10 months of the year outside of L.A. and he was doing incredible things in other places. We were no longer partners in crime."

In the months since the split Wilde has been linked to several high-profile men, including Ryan Gosling, Justin Timberlake and Bradley Cooper — not that any of those trysts have been confirmed. When Us Weekly reported Wilde and Cooper were canoodling at an after-party for The Hangover Part II, she tweeted, "I think Us Weekly has the same sources who promised us WMDs in Iraq."

It's no surprise people want to know about Wilde's private life. Sex appeal is a big part of her persona, thanks in large part to the two steamy TV roles that kick-started her career — a bisexual CONTINUED ▶ probably a lot like me — it's really very shocking.”

Cowboys & Aliens casts Wilde as an enigmatic traveller who helps our hero — an amnesiac cowboy played by Daniel Craig — fight off intergalactic baddies. The action takes place in an Old West town ruled by a sneering colonel played by one of Hollywood's foremost sneering specialists, Harrison Ford.

“What's great is that I don't have to play the weeping lady in distress,” Wilde told Vanity Fair. “I get to play a pretty cool and powerful woman. I love the horses, I love the guns. For an actor, to be in a Western feels almost like a rite of passage. It's uniquely American.”

The Change-Up, on the other hand, is a sophomoric comedy that centres on two buddies — Dave (Bateman) and Mitch (Reynolds) — who swap bodies after sharing a pee in an enchanted fountain. Wilde plays Dave's sexy co-worker Sabrina in the film that, let's be honest, isn't exactly Oscar Wilde. So why did she choose that project?

“I handed the script to my husband and just heard him hysterically laughing for two hours, saying, ‘It's brilliant. It's genius. You have to do it!’” she told Los Angeles Confidential late last year. Fair enough.

Around the time Wilde went public with news of her separation, she reached another milestone, officially entering her late-20s on March 10th while on the set of Blackbird. It wasn't an easy birthday, but that had nothing to do with the end of her marriage.

“My 27th birthday was spent upside-down in a car in a sparkly mini-dress and heels in 15-below weather with Eric Bana — that's the good part — with six feet of snow and sleet and rain, shivering, doing this post-car crash scene,” she says. “It was pretty hellish. But what made it wonderful was every time I reached a low point Eric Bana would start singing, ‘Happy... Birthday... to you.’”

Okay, so we didn't give her the best birthday, but she's not holding it against us. “I think Montreal is the most amazing city,” she says. “We haven't seen much of it because we've been outside the city, but when I have driven through it at four in the morning it is European and old and incredibly beautiful.”

And even our paparazzi are palatable.

“It was just such a great example of why this city is so different and such a pleasure to shoot in,” says Wilde. “I hope to get to come back here and shoot more movies,” she says. “Maybe in the summer, when you have the jazz fest here. It sounds like fun.”

Wilde in The Change-Up

► bad girl on The O.C., followed by a bisexual pathologist on House.

Over the past year she's parlayed her small-screen popularity into a burgeoning big-screen career. In December, Wilde was about the best-looking thing in the eye-candy blockbuster TRON: Legacy. This month she's a mysterious cowgirl in director Jon Favreau's sci-fi/Western mash-up Cowboys & Aliens and has a supporting role in the Ryan Reynolds/Jason Bateman comedy The Change-Up. In October she and Justin Timberlake headline In Time, a sci-fi about a society that stops aging. Then Blackbird, in which Wilde and Eric Bana play sibling fugitives, hits theatres sometime in 2012.

That means a lot of interviews over the next year. Fortunately, Wilde is comfortable around the press — probably because she comes from a family of journalists. Her mother, Leslie Cockburn, is a well-known reporter, documentary filmmaker and 60 Minutes producer; her father Andrew Cockburn has written several books about the Middle East.

Olivia Cockburn (she changed her surname to Wilde as an homage to humorist Oscar Wilde) was born in New York City but grew up mostly in Washington, D.C., where, aside from being journalists, her parents were also renowned socialites, hosting parties where the guest lists included the likes of George Clooney and Mick Jagger.

She was never interested in the family business, though. Wilde always wanted to act. While on the Cowboys & Aliens set at L.A.'s Universal Studios she reminisced about an earlier visit. “I remember being 12 and going on the Universal tour, on the tram visiting sets and dreaming of one day working there. It would mean I had achieved my dream and my goal,” Wilde told Los Angeles Confidential magazine. “It just seemed impossible. And now seeing the trams go by and little girls are on it who are

THE OSCARS OF HOTNESS

In some circles, it's bigger than an Academy Award. In 2009, Olivia Wilde earned the top spot on Maxim magazine's notorious Maxim Hot 100. Later that year the writers for Wilde's TV show House poked fun at the honour in a scene where Dr. House consoles Dr. Foreman about his troubled relationship with Wilde's character, Dr. Hadley, saying, “My condolences. Although, it's not like she's the hottest woman in the world.” —MW

CASTING CALL

BY INGRID RANDOJA

REITMAN TAKES WINSLET SHOPPING

Director Jason Reitman has a knack for directing women — Ellen Page in Juno, Vera Farmiga and Anna Kendrick in Up in the Air. Next up he'll guide Kate Winslet in his adaptation of the Joyce Maynard novel, Labor Day. Set in the 1980s, Winslet plays a single mom whose shopping trip for clothes with her 13-year-old son takes a bizarre turn when they give a bleeding ex-convict (Josh Brolin) a ride. Labor Day shoots next year in New England.

WILL REDFORD TAKE A WALK?

He turns 75 this month, but Robert Redford is not finished as an actor. He's considering a few films, the most prominent being the big-screen adaptation of Bill Bryson's comedic book A Walk in the Woods, which sees the author (played by Redford) walking the Appalachian Trail. Nick Nolte is in talks to play Redford's pal, who tags along on the journey.

WHAT'S GOING ON WITH...

Fantastic Voyage

Campy but beloved, the 1966 sci-fi Fantastic Voyage, about a group of scientists shrunk to atomic size and injected inside a human body to destroy a blood clot, has been the subject of remake talks dating all the way back to 1984. The list of directors who've been involved in the re-imagining include Roland Emmerich, James Cameron, Tarsem Singh and Paul Greengrass. The project is now on stable ground with Cameron producing and Shawn Levy (Night at the Museum) directing, and Levy is eyeing Hugh Jackman as the lead since the pair got on so well making the upcoming Real Steel.

EMINEM FIGHTS BACK

Eminem earned kudos for his performance in 2002's 8 Mile, but never seized the day as an actor. That could change as the rapper has signed on to play a boxer in Southpaw, about a fighter who gets back into the ring after overcoming tragedy. Training Day director Antoine Fuqua has been approached to direct the pic that starts shooting this fall.

HAILEE STEINFELD AND JASON REITMAN IMAGES BY GETTY FOR IMAGE.NET; RACHEL NICHOLS PHOTO BY BYRON PURVIS/KEYSTONE PRESS

CROWE IS SUPERDAD

Russell Crowe has agreed to play Jor-El, Superman's (Henry Cavill) father in director Zack Snyder's Man of Steel. Crowe's involvement makes us think Jor-El isn't a minor character in Snyder's reboot, but rather will have significant screen time since Crowe isn't one to fade into the background.

FRESH FACE RACHEL NICHOLS

Rachel Nichols, a Columbia graduate with a degree in economics and math, isn't exactly putting her Ivy League education to good use swinging a sword in the blood-spurting Conan the Barbarian. But like many pretty, brainy gals who needed money to pay for school, Nichols turned to modelling, which in turn led to acting. You've seen her on TV's Criminal Minds, on the big screen in G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra, and the Trekkers will recognize her as Gaila, the green-skinned alien who gets it on with James T. Kirk in J.J. Abrams' Star Trek.

WHERE ART THOU HAILEE STEINFELD?

Wondering what True Grit's breakout star Hailee Steinfeld is up to? She's in Italy this month starring as Juliet in director Carlo Carlei's adaptation of Romeo and Juliet. At 14, Steinfeld is the right age to portray Shakespeare's star-crossed lover (Juliet is all of 13 in the play). Her Romeo? He's 19-year-old British up-and-comer Douglas Booth, who starred as Boy George in a BBC TV bio-pic. Holly Hunter will play the nurse and Gossip Girl's Ed Westwick is Juliet's cousin, Tybalt. Romeo and Juliet hits screens sometime next year.

ALSO IN THE WORKS ▶ Now You See Me casts Jesse Eisenberg as a magician who uses his skills to carry out heists. ▶ Look for Evangeline Lilly as an elf, and Barry Humphries (a.k.a. Dame Edna) as the Goblin King in The Hobbit. ▶ The sequel G.I. Joe 2: Cobra Strikes is looking to land Dwayne Johnson to play one of the Joes. ▶ Sam Worthington stars as a free-spirited photographer who stirs up trouble in the surfing pic Drift.

Ready for School?

Start the year off right with the latest, greatest gear

So you didn't play for the Rutherford Varsity Team, who cares? You'll still look sporty and stylish in this classic Letterman Jacket ($80, H&M).

If your life revolves around Facebook, so can your phone. The INQ Cloud Touch ($30 with a three-year plan, TELUS) uses Facebook as its central hub so friends' videos, pictures and status updates appear right on your homescreen.

Save money on novels for English class when you download free classics like Oliver Twist, War and Peace and Pride and Prejudice onto your Kobo eReader Touch ($139, Indigo).

A functional, and funky, desk is a must. The MICKE Desk ($100, IKEA) is both.

The new Samsung Galaxy Tab 10.1 ($450, The Source) is the thinnest, lightest big-screen tab out there (it has a 10.1-inch screen), at just 565 grams and 8.6mm thin. Throw it in your book bag and off you go.

Sometimes you need a bag, sometimes you don't. An Envirosax bag folds into a tiny roll when not in use. Choose from the Slingsax Bag ($16) or Robot Bag ($9) — both available from www.envirosax.ca.

Buy all the tech gadgets you want, you're still going to need an old-fashioned binder. We like Hilroy's Doodle Binder ($13, Walmart) because you colour it in yourself.

Girls who like grunge will love Palladium's Plaid Boots ($110, SoftMoc).

RETURN ENGAGEMENT

It's 1970,

America is bitterly divided over the Vietnam War, and along comes a film that — without being about that particular battle — captures the nation's anti-war, anti-establishment sentiments.

The war comedy *M*A*S*H*, directed by Robert Altman and starring Donald Sutherland (left) and Elliott Gould (right) as two rebellious military surgeons operating out of a mobile hospital during the Korean War, was expected to be a failure by Fox, the studio that made it. They hated Altman's overlapping dialogue and were appalled by its uncouth stars, its crassness and frat-house humour — all of which Altman uses brilliantly to illustrate the absurdity and horror of war.

The film went on to earn five Oscar nominations (it won a single award for Best Screenplay), become one of the year's highest-grossing films and inspire a beloved TV show.

LAST NIGHT

AUGUST 2

Timing is everything. A married couple (Sam Worthington, Keira Knightley) is put to the test when he takes a business trip to Philadelphia with an attractive co-worker (Eva Mendes) on the same day she runs into an old lover (Guillaume Canet). It doesn't help that they had a big fight the night before.

RIO

AUGUST 2

Anne Hathaway and Jesse Eisenberg voice rare blue macaws Jewel (Hathaway) and Blu (Eisenberg) in this exotic animated feature. After spending most of his life living in a Minnesota bookstore, Blu is flown (by plane) to Rio de Janeiro to mate with Jewel, who is — at first, anyway — not impressed.

YOUR HIGHNESS

AUGUST 9

Noble brother Fabious (James Franco) and his idiot brother Thadeous (Danny McBride) embark on a quest to save Fabious's fiancée (Zoey Deschanel) from the clutches of an evil wizard (Justin Theroux) in this fantasy farce set in medieval times. Look for Natalie Portman as the fiercest warrior of the lot.

PAUL

AUGUST 9

Comic duo Simon Pegg and Nick Frost (Shaun of the Dead, Hot Fuzz) team with Seth Rogen — who voices, and provides the motion-capture acting for animated alien Paul — in this sci-fi comedy about a couple of British comic-book geeks whose rented RV is boarded by an extraterrestrial near Area 51.

Something Special

TIM BURTON'S THE NIGHTMARE BEFORE CHRISTMAS 3D

AUGUST 30

As studios slowly start to release 3D movies for the new generation of 3D TVs here's one that's worth getting excited about. Although not originally created in 3D (it first hit theatres in 1993), this spooky, musical puppet show directed by Henry Selick (Tim Burton wrote it and produced) was converted to 3D for a theatrical re-release in 2006.

FINALLY...

ROCKIN' ROLE

We've gotta admit — from this pic, anyway — it looks like Tom Cruise pulls off a pretty convincing rock star in Rock of Ages, the big screen version of the popular musical that's set to hit theatres next June. Cruise must think so, too. After all, he's the one who released this image of himself as Stacee Jaxx, the lecherous frontman for the disbanding rock outfit Arsenal, via his official website, www.tomcruise.com. He's got the hair, the abs and the tats, but can Cruise sing? Director Adam Shankman says so. He reports that Cruise practiced his vocals for five hours a day while preparing for the role, and says the result is a mash-up of Axl Rose, Keith Richards and Jim Morrison. —MW
